

Who are we?

The Irish Heritage School (IHS) is Ireland's leading facilitator of faculty led community focussed environmental science programs. Our mission is to provide university faculty and study abroad departments with an engaging, welcoming and enriching cultural experience whilst providing an outdoor classroom where students gain an in-depth understanding of the natural landscape, from the underlying bedrock to the glacial landforms, from the overlying soils to the flora and fauna they support. Based in the hidden heart of Ireland's Midlands, with field excursions to the west coast, our programs are deeply immersive and rewarding.

What do we do?

Our programs are built on an inclusive, partnership approach and aim to serve the needs of the community and faculty partners. We will organise all aspects of your program, including:

- Faculty partnered by a dedicated academic leaders
- Pre-departure advising and application assistance
- Airport transfers
- Welcome/project packs
- Homestay accommodation and all meals
- Field trips, workshops and lectures
- In-country orientation and welcome event
- 24/7 in-country support team

Award winning projects embedded in the local community

Study the Irish landscape and environment with in-country experts whilst immersing yourself in the unique heritage of Ireland

I would highly recommend this program. Not only was it a great academic experience, the instructors were kind and helped us integrate ourselves into the local culture and were very protective and engaging at the same time. The locals were kind and accommodating, especially with regard to our homestay parents.

- McKenna, Pikes Peak Community College, CO (USA)

I would strongly recommend an Environmental Science Program with the IHS as the program is a great way to learn a variety of things (geology, ecology, archaeology, heritage) in the class but mostly hands-on.

- Ansley, Eckerd College, FL (USA)

The program was well-rounded, educational and very fun. It was great to hike around Ireland and learn so much about its cultural and environmental past.
